Treating Trauma and Attachment Issues in Children and Families

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25, 2013
8:45 A.M. – 3:30 P.M.
WESTMINSTER, VERMONT

Participants will learn to:

- describe concepts of trauma from biological, psychological, attachment, and family perspectives.
- utilize efficient and holistic assessment techniques for children, parents, and families.
- teach clients effective communication via the 5 step Attachment Communication Training program.
- apply cognitive, systemic, and experiential therapeutic methods to improve core beliefs, behaviors, and family relationships.
- implement a healing and mindful parenting program.

The Program

Attachment is the deep and enduring heartfelt connection that children and caregivers establish in the early stages of life. This connection is the core of a child's world and affects every aspect of development.

Children who have stable families and secure attachments are likely to develop positive self-esteem, effective coping skills, prosocial morality, and relationships which include trust, respect, emotional closeness, and love. Children who experience abuse, neglect, multiple moves and caregivers, insensitive care, and high-stress, chaotic, or violent environments are at risk for developing serious attachment, emotional, and behavioral problems, including depression, PTSD, aggression, and the inability to trust and love parents.

Biological, adoptive, and foster families can be devastated by stress and conflict. Wounded children compulsively repeat negative behaviors; parents feel rejected, inadequate and angry, and hurtful family dynamics are ongoing. The traumatized family is characterized by a negative emotional climate, inadequate support, severe control battles, triangulation, and extreme sibling and marital conflicts.

This seminar is appropriate for mental health, child welfare, school, medical and legal system professionals, and therapeutic parents. The focus will be on concepts, skills, and solutions of child and family therapy, as well as healing parenting. With humor, sensitivity, and insight, the presenters will emphasize effective assessment techniques, therapeutic interventions, and parenting strategies to facilitate positive change with challenging children and traumatized families.

This continuing education activity was approved by the Vermont State Nurses Association's Committee on Education, an accredited approver by the American Nurses Credentialing Center's Commission on Accreditation.
